WORKING PAPERS & PROJECTS

1. Silencing the Green Engine: How Shareholder Voice Suppresses Innovation. (Job Market Paper) [\[Link\]](#)

Advisor: Haiyue Liu

Using a large language model approach to classify environmental shareholder proposals, we find that proposals advancing to a public vote significantly suppress green innovation. Evidence from media coverage and executive compensation is consistent with a multitasking mechanism in which activism increases short-term reputational pressures while weakening incentives for long-horizon investment. However, environmental activism successfully promotes innovation for firms with ex ante environmental deficiencies and during periods of acute climate sentiment. Our findings highlight an unintended friction of public ESG engagement in the absence of informed target selection and timing.

2. Words of (No-) Action: Costs and Benefits of SEC Discretion in Shareholder Proposals (Work in Progress)

With Christian Breitung and Sebastian Müller

This project focuses on SEC's Rule 14a-8 no-action process, a critical regulatory gateway for shareholder activism. Employing optical character recognition (OCR) and large language model (LLM) based contextual reasoning, we construct a novel dataset encompassing over 5,300 SEC no-action letters to trace the full life cycle of shareholder proposals. By quantifying the rhetorical dynamics, legal justifications, and sentiment embedded in the tripartite correspondence among target management, proposing shareholders, and SEC staff, we uncover the benefits and costs in the regulatory review process.
